What does WEBTech™ do?

These shirts are constructed with textile fibres that act as a powerful capillary to quickly absorb and channel moisture away from the body, towards the surface of the garment, for quick evaporation and maximum breathability.

The high twist construction makes the fabric silkier and smoother to the touch compared to ordinary polyester, or other high twist yarns.

www.trimarksportswear.com/webtech

What is SMARTech™?

A highly technical product providing beneficial, identifiable features through some of the latest technological developments in 'smart' textiles.

'Smart' Textiles by SMARTech™ are textiles designed to detect and respond to a specific condition(s) in their environment via one or more of the following methods:

BIO-CHEMICAL TECHNOLOGY – altering the composition or finish of a fibre/fabrication to add a feature, such as waterproofing, breathability, antimicrobial properties, etc.

MECHANICAL INNOVATION – engineering a fibre, such as it's shape, diameter, or inner architecture to yield special properties.

www.trimarksportswear.com/smartech

EZ-CARE

Only our EZ-Care™ collection repels spills and looks smooth straight out of the dryer. These garments are built to last and endure the day-to-day grind without fading, shrinking or pilling. Just wash-and-wear, no need to dry clean.

These benefits are the result of the combination of fibres and the complexity of the knits. There are no chemical treatments and as a result these properties are environmentally friendly and last for the life of the garment.

Look for the EZ-Care™ Logo.

↘ 2010 TREND REPORT: COLOUR

Colours ebb and flow with the season, but the tried and true will always be black, navy and stone. However the latest in colours reflect the more active trend with new twists on old favourites such as multiple shades of green and blue, including Trimark's Chill and Juniper. "They're very easy to wear," says Whitfield of the fresh new options. But why settle for one colour when you can combine many? Keep an eye out for more plaid in the corporate apparel category, including a fun new soft shell. "Plaid is very hot, especially patterns like the modernized Prince Of Wales checks. Expect to see a lot of it coming down the pipeline."

spend & shine

You never get a second chance to make a first impression: But what about a lasting impression? All indicators are there's never been a better time to strengthen your brand presence.

Most companies take one of two positions during tough economic times—slash or spend—and how you behave in the short term predicts long-term success. If indeed the worst is over and our economy is moving into recovery mode you have to ask yourself a key questions: Is your brand ready?

Studies show reducing marketing spend during difficult economic times can leave your brand in a vulnerable position when the economy recovers. Research confirms the best strategy for weathering an economic storm and boosting long-term ROI is to increase marketing expenditure.

Granted, it may be difficult to convince management and those in the C-suite that this is the way to go. After all, studies also show that the first thing consumers do during times of economic uncertainty is reign in spending. If consumers are spending less on your product and you're spending more on promotion, this doesn't do much for you bottom line. But that's short-term thinking and few successful business people get ahead with that kind of attitude.

Consider this: A comprehensive analysis by the Profit Impact of Marketing Strategies (PIMS) database compared results generated by companies that reduced, maintained and increased marketing spend during recessionary times. The study looked specifically at Return on Capital Employed (ROCA) during the recession and during the first two years of recovery. It then compared changes in market share for the same period and discovered that companies that cut marketing spend reported better return during the recession, but struggled after the recession ended. In turn, spenders achieved significantly higher return on capital employed and won on average an additional 1.3 percentage points of market share. Bottom line; you've got to spend money to make money.

This of course is just one of hundreds if not thousands of studies that convey this powerful message: Increasing marketing spend during less certain times is a smart business strategy for those who want to be at the forefront of the economic recovery.

And all signs indicate that economy recovery, while slow, is imminent. A key component from a marketer's perspective is consumer confidence. A Harris/Decima poll in June showed Canadian consumer confidence at its highest level in 15 months, with an increasing number of Canadians optimistic that better times are ahead. Is your company positioned to take advantage of the looming recovery?

It's not too late: So get ready and get spending. The end is in sight.

“Increasing marketing spend during less certain times is a smart business strategy for those who want to be at the forefront of the economic recovery.”

2010 TREND REPORT: EASE OF MOVEMENT

Whether the end user is jumping in and out of a vehicle, lifting boxes or simply going about every-day tasks, ease of movement makes work and life easier. "It's not enough to have a big loose garment that allows ease of movement due to oversize, the key move points must incorporate expertly cut shapes that follow and encircle those areas that are most mobile," Whitfield says of the move toward high-tech fabrics that shape elbows, knees and other key mobility areas. "The look is more streamlined.... When you move the garment moves with you."

ANTI-PILL

Despite the rising awareness around Corporate Social Responsibility, many business leaders still confuse responsibility with philanthropy. CSR isn't simply giving to the latest cause (although that's an invaluable endeavour) it's about creating sustainable business practices through respectful relationships with communities, partners, employees and the environment. CSR is a strategic business issue and one progressive companies should embrace at every turn.

These days stakeholders—be it customers, employees, shareholders or associates—demand more from the organizations they do interact with. People want to know how these businesses are run and who runs them. A business' values are reflected at every turn, in every decision made.

The challenge, however, is communicating these efforts: How do you get the word out without sounding self serving? It's this quandary that prevents many organizations from doing much more than outlining their CSR mandate in an out-of-the-way link on their web site or highlighting the good in a response to a public relations fiasco. Many larger companies publish a CSR report, but again it's not widely available. Effective communication is a quandary for organizations that want people to know what they're up to, but don't want to appear to use CSR as a cynical marketing ploy.

In truth, however, you're doing your company, customers and other stakeholders a disservice by not highlighting CSR efforts. Consumers want this information to help them decide how to spend their money; partners want to know they're working with ethical businesses; and shareholders want to feel good about their investments.

Of course you can't relay to everyone everything. In this information-saturated society this will result in overload and turn people off your message. The key is carefully choosing information and relaying it in a way that is relevant to your target audience. If you keep front of mind their goals—i.e. making smarter decisions at the checkout or working for a socially responsible company—this will help frame your message and let you know which information is best to communicate.

While press releases are standard fare, something as simple as a product label or hangtag is a strong tool. If you want to reach people in an appropriate way it might mean an issue-related event, newsletter, promotion, brochure, ad, web site, employee incentive or word-of-mouth campaign. Again, the essence of strong CSR communications is giving stakeholders the information they need to make better decisions. Done right, an effective CSR communication strategy is mutually beneficial. ↩

“CSR is a strategic business issue and one progressive companies should embrace at every turn.”

- COUNTLESS REPORTS SHOW STRONG CSR COMMUNICATIONS HAVE WIDE-REACHING BENEFITS:
- ✓ Motivated & productive employees
  - ✓ Increased levels of customer satisfaction and loyalty
  - ✓ Improved brand and company reputation
  - ✓ Better relationships with the community
  - ✓ Cost savings

↘ 2010 TREND REPORT:
BONDED SOFTSHELLS SET THE PACE

The softshell used to be the domain of the high-end outdoor equipment makers and prohibitively high prices reflected this. Increasingly, however, people are demanding such features in everyday wear and, as a result, prices are coming down and softshells are a must-have. “The forerunners—woven stretch fabrics bonded to brushed fleece—are now the mainstay items in a category that is still hot and growing,” says Whitfield. “Creative design teams are coming up with many new alternative methods of bonding and are marrying new and inventive partnerships in layered soft shells. Plaid surfaces, plush layers, embossed surface textures are but some of the new mediums for these applications.”

2010 TREND REPORT: LASER & WELDED TECHNOLOGY

“The whole idea is less bulk,” says Whitfield of the move towards laser cut pockets and other details completed with heat sealing. While the idea originally came about because serious outdoor enthusiasts wanted to condense packing and reduce carrying weight, the streamlined technical look and feel is now popular among everyday end users. “Laser welding, heat sealing and other non traditional methods of detail trim application add to the hi-tech focus in the new wave of technical garments.”

ECO WARRIORS

Back up your Eco claims and sell with confidence.

It's good to be green but nobody wants to be greenwashed. In an era where green sells, it's easy to get up in the momentum and slap green claims on just about everything, but governing bodies and savvy consumers are cracking down, demanding accountability from businesses that want to brand eco-friendly products.

In the apparel industry, where advancements in green and enhanced-performance garments are moving rapidly, it's more important than ever to increase transparency and back up all claims. The Competition Bureau recently set guidelines to clear up confusion regarding green marketing and the apparel industry is rising to the challenge.

"We want our customers to have complete confidence in whatever they buy from us," says Jackie Whitfield, VP of Merchandising at Trimark Sportswear Group.

"We reviewed our whole product line and catalogue because we wanted to make sure we had lab tests, reports etc. in place to back up every claim."

It was a huge undertaking, but important because Trimark's people know they can stand behind all of their products, including the ever-expanding and eco-friendly Evolve™ line. The company works with third party accredited labs to authenticate each and every claim for all apparel. On the environmental front it's all about securing a comprehensive paper trail and working with trustworthy suppliers that can verify all materials during every step of the manufacturing process.

"We will require a vendor to supply a certificate to certify the yarn source is really recycled polyester," says Whitfield, adding more and more of Trimark's customers are asking to see that certificate as part of their own efforts to source from a greener supply chain. With an increasing number of organizations introducing green mandates, they want to ensure that theirs is an all-encompassing effort right down to the garments worn by employees.

The interest in eco-friendly products is growing rapidly, says Whitfield. "The reality is that these products, such as polyester fleece made from recycled plastic bottles (PET) and other blended cotton and recycled polyester fabrics, are in high demand and the supply is limited and specialized."

As a result, the cost of buying green tends to be a little higher than other products.

"The biggest challenge is to promote green and be competitive," adds Whitfield. "Even though we have to pay more for eco-friendly products we try to level the price points to be comparable with other products."

For example, the latest line includes a recycled fleece for less than $50, as well as a collection of affordable eco-friendly hats, scarves and mitts. "Value will always play a part in the promotional products industry," says Whitfield "and yet the manner in which corporations mirror their buying practices to the world will also make a difference in where these valuable dollars are spent. The green machine will keep turning its hybrid wheels and the companies that can grow and expand with this challenge in these trying times can become the real consciousness of the industry." ↙

“We will require a vendor to supply a certificate to certify the yarn source is really recycled polyester”

– Jackie Whitfield

With new regulations you'll note some of the favourite products in the Evolve™ line have a new name. Items that used to be referred to as Bamboo Charcoal are now called 100% Polyester because it used to sound like the fabric was made of bamboo when in fact Bamboo Charcoal is embedded in textiles and acts as a non-chemical wicking finish. In addition, Rayon from Bamboo used to be known as Bamboo Yarn. The inclusion of the word rayon reflects the fact that it's a manufactured fibre.

↘ 2010 TREND REPORT: WATERPROOF

"In the old days you put on a coat and it soaked through—those days are gone," says Whitfield, referring to the new generation of multifunctional wear that boast various water-resistant finishes and features, such as full-seam taping. "From wicking and breathable first layering pieces to waterproof and breathable outerwear, the trends continue to push the highest levels of the performance envelope." While waterproof used to mean a rubber sweat-inducing coat, options abound when it comes to waterproof breathable garments—such as two and three-layer jackets—that see end users through all sorts of weather.

From Rags to Riches

So you've been charged with starting a corporate apparel program and are panicked because: A—you have no idea where to begin and B—fashion isn't your forte. Take a deep breath; you don't have to be an inner fashionista to launch a smart corporate apparel program. The secret is being a decision maker who knows his or her audience.

Your goal is to make available a selection of corporate apparel that accommodates a wide audience within a set framework. What you want is a program that facilitates a consistent brand image; creates a sense of cohesiveness and pride among employees; allows people to work effectively; and, in some cases, enables customers to identify your people.

Gone are the days of one sizes fits all (okay one size or style never fit all, but all were expected to wear it), these days the biggest challenge will be sifting through the dizzying array of choices—styles, colours, features, fabrics—when it comes to corporate apparel.

Tips for getting started:

▶ START SMALL AND BUILD IN LAYERS

Depending on the size of your organization, putting together a complete wardrobe all at once may not be an option. Budget, time and other constraints mean that many companies build their corporate apparel program over a series of months, if not years. If this is the case, plan ahead: start with a smart polo and move forward with an eye on adding layers, perhaps a long-sleeve option then fleece and jacket. Once you have the ground work in place, you can branch out into other styles and features.

▶ BE SELECTIVE

While it might be tempting (and easier) to pack the company store with every style and piece of clothing in your trademark corporate blue, it's much more than that. A corporate apparel program can't be everything to everyone. It's up to you to make those choices and edit your selection down to pieces that meet the needs of end users and fulfill the corporate agenda. A corporate apparel program without a clear focus may well backfire; instead of presenting a consistent brand image you'll just end up with a sea of blue.

▶ KNOW YOUR END USER

Corporate apparel has to be functional. While a white button down might appeal to those in head office, it'll be a disaster for those on the loading dock. Take stock of everyone in your organization and what they wear to work now. Your program may have to accommodate a number of diverse needs from a starched professional look to easy wash and wear T-shirts. If your delivery people need to wear coats, providing them with a nice polo shirt is a waste of time. If you're not sure, do a survey or ask people from different departments to weigh in on a couple of options. People will be more accepting of a new corporate apparel program if they feel their needs are being considered.

▶ BALANCE OF THE SEXES

Gone are the days of so-called unisex gear that was—who are we kidding—designed for men but worn by everyone. From well-placed darts to female-friendly cuts and added piping, these days corporate apparel embraces women in the workplace. When developing a comprehensive program, women's apparel is an essential part of the mix.

▶ FOCUS ON THE BRAND

While you want people to feel good and be able to perform in what they're wearing, chances are you're dealing with a wide audience and diverse tastes. A corporate apparel program by its very nature can not accommodate everyone's personal style: it's about reinforcing your company's brand and that should be foremost in your mind. Luckily with the wide selection of products on offer, you can usually strike a happy medium by giving people something they feel comfortable in without compromising your message.

▶ YOU GET WHAT YOU PAY FOR

Budget is always a consideration when choosing corporate apparel, but don't be blinded by the bottom line. Investing in more expensive fabrics and quality pieces pays off in the long run. If you're looking for uniforms, for example, less expensive options may be tempting, but consider durability and wearability. If an employee is wearing a shirt every day it needs to stand up to constant washing and wear and tear. When it comes to incentives and rewards it's often better to opt for items that have a higher perceived value, such as a fleece or jacket. The quality of clothing you chose is a reflection of your brand and cutting corners today may cost you tomorrow.

▶ CONSULT A PROFESSIONAL

Your apparel provider is there to help and has the know-how to make your job easier. Whether you're just starting out or ready to take your apparel program to a new level, our experts are happy to help.

Corporate apparel:

- ✓ Immediately identifies an employee
- ✓ Builds employee moral

- ✓ Contributes to a consistent brand image
- ✓ Increases company visibility
- ✓ Conveys the message you company is strong and confident

INDUSTRY-SPECIFIC TIPS FOR CLOSING THE DEAL

There are thousands of books out there on how to sell. From great toms, such as Dale Carnegie's How to Win Friends & Influence People, to just about anything written by sales guru Zig Ziglar, lessons tend to transcend no matter what you're selling, from widgets to multi-million dollar homes. When it comes to selling corporate apparel, these big picture lessons still apply.

▼ DO A NEEDS ASSESSMENT: One of the most important things about selling is intimately knowing your customer. It sounds obvious, but in this harried world you'd be surprised at how often people—not you of course—are willing to throw out a wad of generic pitches and hope something sticks. When you understand your client's business it makes selling (and buying) that much easier. You can be more efficient; zeroing in on what people need and why; all the while impressing (and flattering) them with your in-depth knowledge. If people feel like you've made the extra effort to understand their needs and the needs of their business, they'll be more likely to trust and want to work with you.

▼ BE A CONSULTANT: Setting up an apparel program can be overwhelming. Instead of allowing potential clients to flip aimlessly through a catalogue or peruse a website, dazzle them with your know-how. Pre-select a number of items you think would be right for their business and be ready to explain why they need it. Give customers choices, but don't make it a chore. Show things at different price points and explain why they're priced that way and what the features will mean for the end user. If you can educate and provide expert advice it will give you an advantage over the competition.

▼ SHOW AND TELL: Clothing is tactile so looking at pictures isn't always enough to sell a product. People need to touch it, stretch it, watch the water bead off a repellent fabric and wear it. Visit clients in person, bring samples and encourage people to experiment, ask questions and compare how various fabrics or applications feel and perform.

▼ PITCH A PROGRAM: Too often we think of programs as the domain of big multinationals or chains. Any company, big or small can benefit from an apparel program—even if it's only outfitting a dozen employees. Research a business, pull together a handful of ideas and set up an appointment. Often smaller businesses overlook the power of uniforms or assume they wouldn't meet quotas when it comes to minimum orders and the like: reach out to this untapped base and they're likely to respond. The same is true for any size and type of business: zero in on sectors that don't traditionally invest in uniforms or corporate wear and show them how your business can help their business.

▼ KNOW YOUR PRODUCT: There are so many hi-tech fabrics and performance features on the market that you can't expect clients to understand industry jargon (especially if you don't understand it yourself). Develop thorough knowledge not only of what everything means, but also when and why end users will need specific functions. If you can be honest with someone and say 'don't spend the money on X function because your employees don't really need it,' a client will be more likely to listen when you encourage them to go the extra mile on something else.

▼ BE CREATIVE: Taking a $1,000 budget and blowing it on 20 $50 polo shirts is easy. It's up to you to show clients how to be a little more creative. Demonstrate how $50 can be allocated for each person, with a combination of garments: the $50 polo shirt; or a less expensive polo shirt and fleece combo; or a wind catcher or a high-end tech top. Emphasize that polo shirts, while a fabulous option, aren't the last word in corporate wear.

▼ BE BUDGET SAVVY: There's a time and a place to up sell, but it's also equally as important to know when to be the voice of reason. Be respectful of a client's budget and direct them to the sales lists when the opportunity arises. It's all part of building trust: If you help garner a deal on 100 one-off shirts for a specific event, they'll remember you when it's time to place the next, and perhaps much more substantial, order.

▼ WALK THE WALK: Wear what you're selling or better yet, put your company's logo on the gear and get out there. If people see you sporting your products, if you can talk first hand about the features and benefits from an end user's perspective; if you demonstrate you believe in what you're selling, you have the sales advantage.

“ WHEN YOU UNDERSTAND YOUR CLIENT'S BUSINESS IT MAKES SELLING THAT MUCH EASIER. ”

STEP 2 the Direct Source™ process

Contact your sales representative to start the process. We can customize anything and everything on your garment, colour, labels, trimmings and sizes. Select from our library or create your own. You will need to gather some key information – size ratio, quantity, delivery time. Once the design is finalized, we'll take care of everything for you.

develop

build

STEP 3 the details

Due to the complexity of all the options, it is difficult to provide exact timelines. For example, styles that can be made domestically can be as fast as 45 days. And slight alterations to our existing styles can be approximately 100 days. Some brand new designs can take as long as 150 days to be manufactured and delivered.

Decorating one-stop-shop

makin' it
EASY
for you

Why use the one-stop-shop?

We are a one-stop-shop with no fuss, no hassle for quality decorating. Our customer service desk can help you to digitize your logo, and help you with your Embroidery, Embossing & Debossing, Heat Seal Transfers and Silk Screening requirements.

With our many years of experience and expertise in the industry, we will make it easy and hassle free for you.

Over 90% of our customers use embroidery, why?

Embroidery is a classic time-honoured method of embellishing garments with an authentic high quality representation of your logo...

Over thousands of years, embroidery techniques have been refined from the traditional hand stitched art form to the high tech, high speed computerised machines of today, offering complex designs with hundreds of custom colour choices

Today's embroidery machines can turn almost any image into a high quality embroidered logo, that is wear and tear proof, and will survive almost any wash & wear regimen. It is far and away our most popular decorating option, and over 90% of our decorated garments are embroidered.

With over 300 thread colours - including specialty threads - in stock and full time experienced operators, we can complete any order in any timeline.

Want to differentiate your logo even more?

If you're looking to differentiate yourself from embroidery, or if you have a water proof garment and wish to retain the integrity of the fabric, it might be preferable to use non-penetrating methods such as Heat Sealing, Embossing or Debossing - all of which we offer in our One-Stop-Shop.

For more details please speak to your Promotional Product Distributor or visit our website www.trimarksportswear.com/decorating to see samples and learn about other decorating options.

Swatches & sewout samples: complimentary free digital image. A minimum of 12 units per logo colourway applies. Minimum of 72 units. Allow 3-7 business days after all logo approvals. No rush charges. Please note: Trimark does not sell direct.

sizing chart

Sleeve length - Relax arm, and measure from the centre of the back of the neck, over the shoulder and down to the outer wrist.

Waist - Measure around your natural waistline, while in your underwear. Keep one finger between the tape and your body for an accurate fit.
